THE U. S. MARINES IN CAMP

A BIG THREE DAY PROGRAM FEATURE OF THE CAMP.

July 1 and 3 Pickett's Charge As It Was—July 4th Up-to-Date Charge.

The 59th anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg July 1, 2 and 3 will see the town and battlefield in possession of a new kind of an army, the United States Marines, and equipped such as the boys of Blue and Gray of 1863 never dreamed of. The Marines look like other armies of khaki clad boys who were in camp here in 1917 and 1918, but the objective is entirely different. Now it is a great picnic to all of them.

The main feature of the show or camp is going to be a series of manoeuvers showing Pickett's charge as it actually took place in 1863 and also as it would take place at the present time with all the modern equipment of an army. The big days and features will be the following:

Saturday afternoon, July 1, when President and Mrs. Harding will witness the first production of Pickett's charge. The President is expected to be here over night and will likely leave on Sunday for Marion, Ohio, where he is scheduled to be on July 4th.

Monday afternoon, July 3, will see a second production of the famous charge and it is expected that a great number of prominent Army and Navy officers and representatives of foreign governments will be here for both this and the Saturday production. Governor Sproul will also be present.

On Tuesday morning, July 4th, will take place the modern up-to-date Pickett's charge with all the modern machinery of war.

Every facility will be given our own people and visitors to witness these events. While parts of the Emmitsburg Road, Hancock Avenue and Confederate Avenues will be closed for the events, large parking areas have been located and cars can be parked in the care of men who will be in charge and there will be great spaces reserved for the people to witness the events.

The Fifth and Sixth Regiments of the United States Marines went into camp here on Monday afternoon after a week of marching and tramping from Quantico. There were 5,500 Marines in the line of march and hundreds of tons of all kinds of army equipment and supplies. While the march for the week to this place was a new experience and there were many weary men with blistered feet, the end of the march found few the worse for the tramp. Some of the newer apparatus were small two-wheeled wagons with pneumatic tires to carry machine guns and other luggage and they were pushed and pulled by the Marines. There were trucks of all kinds and for every use under the sun that shines on an army. Trucks with luggage, with supplies, with kitchen outfits and stoves. There were trucks loaded with aeroplanes, with apparatus for search-lights, for miles of wire with phoning apparatus. There was a radio receiving and sending truck, trucks with electric light plant. There were several famous 75 guns and other varieties the world war developed. There were catterpillar tractors and faw tanks of a small size.

The marching Marines and accompanying trucks took about four hours to pass a given point and on Monday the march was from a point near Thurmont to Gettysburg about 17 miles. The head of the line arrived shortly after the noon hour and the end of the train moved into camp about four o'clock.

The camp is located on the ground over which Pickett's charge was made, the main camp of the Marines being in front of Seminary Ridge, at point where the Lee monument stands and north of Spangler's Woods. North from the camp stretch the dozen or more airplanes two of them being bombing planes with two engines. On the rise of ground in front of the McMillan's Woods is Headquarters, where Brigadier General Smedley D. Butler and staff are located.

The camp has been named Camp Harding, and the President and his party are expected to arrive here by motor from Washington on Saturday. Work is being rushed with all possible speed to complete the quarters at camp, which has been dubbed the White House. This will include a semi-circle of tent buildings, constructed in ampitheatre style, with the President's building in the center. It will have wooden floors and side walls, but a tent top and drops so that the Chief Executive will be under canvas during his stay here. His quarters will include a large reception room, a private office, a bedroom for himself and one for Secretary Christian. Flanking the President's quarters will be on each side three other tents, each with drawing room and bedroom, and on each end of the ampitheatre will be the quarters for Mrs. Harding and others arranged in much the same manner as that being erected for the President.

The site of the President's quarters overlooks the great parade ground and maneuver field and also the flying field. It is ideally situated on the crest of Seminary Ridge with West Confederate avenue immediately at its rear.

The arrival of the Marines was marked by a thrilling disaster witnessed by thousands. The first section of the Marines was accompanied by three airplanes and arrived shortly after 1 o'clock on Monday. The air squadron was in command of Captain George B. Hamilton, of Washington, and he was in the leading plane with his mechanician, Sergeant Martin. They were flying a DH-4 plane and came as far as the point at which the carnival is located on Steinwehr avenue, to make a turn toward the landing field. The height of Captain Hamilton's plane is variously estimated at from a thousand to a few hundred feet up when his plane was seen to go into a tail spin and turn over and start earthward in a nose spin and descend rapidly to the ground. Any efforts of the two men to right the plunging plane were unavailing and it fell with a crash to the ground and was demolished. Those who rushed to the wreck found Captain Hamilton dead and Sergeant G. R. Martin still breathed. He was rushed to a temporary hospital of the camp but expired before he reached the hospital.

Several explanations have been offered for the accident. At Quantico the land is almost at sea level, while Gettysburg is over 500 feet higher and it has been suggested that instrument in plane showing altitude was not properly read with deduction for the altitude of Gettysburg in order to get the plane away in a glide, that an air pocket was discovered into which the plane whirled and fell.

Captain Hamilton, in the words of his commander, Gen. Butler, was among the best of the U. S. Marines and had won about all the medals and decorations a Marine could get.

The dead pilot had a record for daring and twice the Distinguished Service Cross was awarded to him for gallantry overseas, at Belleau Wood and Soissons. He also won the French Legion of Honor, the Croix de Guerre, with three palms and seven stars, and had Belgian and Montenegrin awards. He had been in the Marines since 1908 and was a son of Charles A. Hamilton, Washington correspondent for the Buffalo Times and other newspapers, and was thirty years old. The body of Captain Hamilton was sent to Washington accompanied by a detail. The body of Sergeant Martin was sent to his home in Buffalo, on Wednesday after a brief service in St. Francis Xavier Church.

A greater part of the time of the Marines in camp has been given to a study of manoeuvers of different parts of the battlefield, and specially to the movements involved in Pickett's charge. In addition to these drills during the day, each evening there will be a parade between six and seven o'clock, followed by band concerts. The Marines have four excellent bands and the massed bands have given concerts. Every day there have been airplanes flying and one of the usual routes is over the town.

The latch string of the camp is wide open for visitors and citizens of Gettysburg and visitors are welcomed to the camp between the hours of 8 A. M. and 9.30 P. M. every day.

Plans for Reading C. E. Convention.

The Adams County Christian Endeavor Union are making plans to send a large delegation to the Reading convention. After such a successful county Christian Endeavor Convention as we had at Aspers last week we should be looking forward to the State C. E. Convention to be held at Reading July 11 to 14. Five delegates have been elected from the St. James C. E. Society and Miss Mazie Krout has been selected to represent the County C. E. Union at Reading. The Arendtsville Lutheran and Reformed Societies propose sending several delegates. Mr. Roy Diem plans to represent the Reformed Society and Mrs. S. W. Frost will register from the Lutheran Society. Other delegates may go also. Miss Hannah Ulrich is going as a delegate from the Biglerville Lutheran Society. Only two Sundays remain in which to elect delegates for the coming convention. It is hoped that Adams county may have the largest delegation at the convention.

An excellent program has been planned with speakers worth hearing. Here are a few of the speakers on the program: Hon. Calvint Coolidge, Vice President United States; Dr. Francis E. Clark, Pres. of United Society, Dr. Ira Landrith, Extension Secretary United Society, A. L. Shartle, Treasurer United Society Clarence Hamilton, Cir. Mgr. C. E World, S. B. Vandersall, Alumni Supt., Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, Quiet Hour leader, Homer Rodeheaver, Billy Sunday's song leader, will lead the music. Other special features are a morning Sunrise Quiet Hour on top of Mt. Penn. A special Junior pageant, a C. E. parade each county delegation will wear a special costume and carry special banners. Delegates should register early.

FRANKLIN COUNTY SURGEON

TELLS HIS EXPERIENCES OF BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Thrilling Events Passed Through at a Number of Points During the Progress of the Battle.

Dr. Franklin A. Bushey, of Franklin county, recently told his experiences at the Battle of Gettysburg and they were printed in the Franklin Repository of Chambersburg. His story of the three days' battle follows:

There is an old and undisputed adage that persons such as soldiers and sailors, who have been exposed to dangers and hardships in youth, when the evenings of their lives arrive, live over again the memories of their past; communing in day-dreams with the twin sisters of Destiny, Comedy and Tragedy, that were the dominating factors governing every impulse mental and physical. So now, in the "sear and yellow leaf" period of my life, events of battle and suffering endured by the Army of the Potomac and the Army of the Frontier rise to memory and find expression. Perhaps they may add in a small way to the education of the readers by giving them a fuller realization of the horrors of the frightful tragedy inflicted upon the Union-loving people of this land by the ruling passion of the slave-power. The savage and merciless despotism evinced in the persecutions and frightfulness of the Civil War was equally as causeless as that shown in the recent World War and as here depicted from a replica of man's inhumanity in all wars and among all peoples.

The large and splendid military unit of my association was a cavalry command; great fine manly soldiers recruited from the northern and western portions of Pennsylvania—intelligent young self-respecting fellows. Their military instincts were of a high order; their loyalty to the Flag and devotion to the Union were complete and perfect. When on dress parade, drawn up in finely ordered lines, or when standing in serried ranks to battle, their magnificent appearance, their splendid personality, the flush and glow of youth and manhood radiating from their forms and faces still rise to my memory. They remind me of the pictures exhibited of the Grand Legions of France when under the eye of the mighty Napoleon.

This command arrived at Gettysburg battlefield in the night of July 1st, 1863, and was placed in a heavily timbered wood close in the rear of the Citizens cemetery—now the National cemetery and near to General Meade's headquarters. All was confusion. The Union Army had been driven back from its advanced position, and there was a hasty readjustment of lines of battle and positions. Daylight had just fairly broken; the men and horses had been fed and cared for; canteens filled; carbines and cannons prepared for immediate use; a plentiful supply of fixed ammunition distributed to the cavalry and cannoniers; and every possible precaution taken for instant battle. I walked to the Baltimore pike near our camp and saw a body of infantry coming at a quick route-step; their flags were out of their cases, waving defiantly in the early morning air. I asked an officer riding at the head of the column: "What troops are you?" He replied: "Pennsylvania Reserves." I waited close by until the familiar face and form of Colonel William D. Dixon, riding at the head of the Fifth Regiment appeared. A pleasant smile spread over his fine military face as I attracted his attention and he gave me a hearty handclasp. There I met also Captain Joseph A. Davison, a resident of Chambersburg, and Lieut. William Burgess, a resident of Fort Loudon; splendid fellows with whom I had associated as an infantry recruit under Colonel W. D. Dixon.

The Reserves filed off the Baltimore pike by left oblique close in the rear of our cavalry camp. Then came the order to the infantry "load and cap guns," and, without stopping their marching step, they prepared for the bloody work close at hand. When the column of Reserves reached the crest of Cemetery Height, I heard the command given quick and sharp: "Brigade left into line! Deploy as skirmishers!" All this time the Confederate rifles and cannons were persistent in firing at the column there forming. The picture of that devoted partiot, Col. William D. Dixon, rises to memory, as I saw him riding slowly among his troops, speaking low, giving his orders in a calm even tone, apparently without excitement, although rifle bullets and cannon missiles were finding victims plentifully to his right and left.

During the day my command was moved to a point several hundred yards south of what is now known as the "High Water Mark," in the main line of battle. The whole western front of Cemetery Ridge was a flame of fire, bursting shells, and whizzing, zipping bullets. Our horses were taken from us as too precious to be killed. The men in the front line flattened out on the ground, each one with some precussion caps in his mouth and a pile of cartridges in his hat or cap or on the ground, ready for immediate use. The cavalry thus dismounted served as supports—defenders—of the artillery,

Physicians Like Gettysburg.

Gettysburg has been selected as the permanent place for holding the annual meetings of the physicians comprising the fifth censorial district and including those practicing in the counties of York, Adams, Franklin, Fulton and Cumberland. For years these meetings have been held at various places in the district, the counties usually taking turns in entertaining the doctors. The fact that Gettysburg is centrally located and so easy of access contributed to its selection.

The annual meeting this year will be held on July 27. Special arrangements will be made to entertain the ladies while the physicians are in their business sessions. A banquet will be held at one of the hotels About 250 doctors are on the roll and at least half of them are expected to be in attendance.

Preliminary arrangements for the meeting have been made by Dr. J. Bruce McCreary, Shippensburg; Dr. Gibson Smith, Dr. Hartman, and Dr. Bacon, York; Dr. Kauffman, Scotland; Dr. T. C. Miller, Abbottstown; Dr. A. C. Rice, McSherrystown; Dr. Harry Spangler, Carlisle, and Dr. J P. Dalbey, Gettysburg.

Half a Square Mile of Homes Burn Down

Arverne-by-the-Sea, one of Long Island's most most thickly populated summer resorts, is practically destroyed as a result of a fire that started in the big Hotel Nautilus. Thousands of people are homeless, great amusement parks are swept out of existence, the Long Island Railroad station is no more, firemen from New York, Brooklyn and all adjoining villages failing to check the flames until a wholesale dynamiting of homes was resorted to. Picture shows an entire street of cottages on fire at one time.

As the State Committee with State candidates had not formulated any platform, a committee was appointed to draft resolutions when the State platform had been announced.

The State platform was given out on Monday of this week and follows:

The Platform.

The voters of Pennsylvania are confronted with a political situation without parallel in the history of the state.

The administration of the State has been inefficient and corrupt, the expenditures far in excess of the receipts and the exact condition of its finances undiscoverable even by the officials charged with their custody.

All well-meaning citizens of every party have equal interest to discover, repudiate and punish the faithless public servants who have brought shame and loss to the Commonwealth.

Only Through New Agents.

Thorough reform may be had only through new agents, who are under no known or secret obligation to the bosses and beneficiaries of the existing political machine.

The Democratic party of Pennsylvania, rising above factional and selfish considerations, furnishes the only practical instrument for the accomplishment of necessary reforms.

The Republican nominee for Governor, now presumptiously assumes his own election by appointing a commission to investigate and report to him, after the November election, on the conduct of the business of the State. In lieu of which we demand that the reports and accounts of the departments be published immediately, so that instead of an unofficial committee the whole citizenship of the State shall have, before the election, the information to pass upon the public affairs of the State and recommend through the officials they elect what shall be the future conduct of public affairs.

We promise a thorough and impartial investigation and revision of the State's administration, that corruption may be uncovered and punished; that wasteful and unnecessary expenditures may cease; that unneeded burdens may be abolished and sinecure officials dismissed; and that the way may be made clear for the reduction of taxation. We further promise to restore to a basis of common honesty the administrative affairs of Pennsylvania.

Control of Local Affairs.

Control over local affairs by the State has gone too far. The State should aid and supplement local administration, but in too many directions it is now a dominating factor to such an extent that local voice and interest in local affairs have almost disappeared. We promise that this condition shall be remedied.

State, county and local taxation has too many forms, is not based on modern standards, handicaps productive energy and business, and increases the cost of living. It weighs most heavily on those least able to pay, and rests lightly on classes of prosperity and privilege well able to bear a fairer share of the public burden. The obsolete and unsystematic medley of taxation calls for a scientific and systematic reform by statute, and when necessary, by constitutional amendment. We favor amendment of the State Constitution so as to permit graduated inheritance and other taxes.

There is no more important function of government than the maintenance of the public school system. We pledge ourselves to maintain everything constructive and useful in the school system and where possible improve upon it. We also pledge ourselves to eliminate waste and duplications and all unnecessary interference in local control. The salaries of teachers must be maintained, and the State should pay a larger proportion thereof in relief of local taxation. The payments of the State must be made promptly and regularly when due.

We approve a comprehensive budget system and pledge ourselves to the enactment thereof.

State Appropriations.

The Constitution contemplates that appropriations should be made by the Legislature and not by the Governor, as has been, in effect, the practice for the last twenty years. If the Democratic nominees are entrusted with power, appropriations will be kept within the estimated revenues of the State or the bills will be vetoed and the Legislature recalled to perform their constitutionl duty.

A complete and adequate law for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States must be provided, and conflict between State and National laws avoided.

We favor a system of Old Age Pensions, based on economical, equitable and humanitarian principles, to the end that aid may be given to the needy aged in their own homes rather than in public institutions and the protection of women and children in industry by proper laws and conscientious enforcement.

In addition to the necessity for reforms in Pennsylvania, the duty also presses to select representatives in the Nation's Congress who will guard that local self-government which is the defense of the unalienable rights of free men which have not yet been surrendered by this sovereign State.

The usurpation of the powers of government by combinations of privileged groups, now dominant in the Republican party, threatens to destroy the Republic and supplant our constitutional democracy by a conscienceless plutocracy.

Duty of Patriotism.

The Republican answer to the cry of the tax-burdened people for relief is the proposition that the prices of the necessaries of life shall be raised still higher by tariff duties designed to further swell the unearned fortunes of the backers and pets of the ruling politicians.

The Republican administration and Congress have wasted months in voluable folly while commerce is paralyzed and civilization disintegrates.

The ills of America and the misery of the world might even now be in progress of permanent relief but for the repudiation of our Government's duty to its own people and to the world.

The Democratic candidates are pledged against that infidelity to political truth which is the Nation's present shame.

The Democratic party offers no bribe to any individual nor special privilege to any class.

Its appeal is to the conscience and right purpose of the honest voter.

In the holy work of recalling Pennsylvania to that righteousness which exalteth a nation, all good citizens must join.

The obligation is above party loyalty.

It is the duty of patriotism.

Monthly Payment of Pensions.

Beginning in September there will be a change in the method of paying government pensions to veterans of the Civil, Mexican, Indian and Spanish-American wars, widows and dependents. Heretofore checks were sent out quarterly from Washington. In accordance with a recent bill passed by Congress these checks will be issued on the fourth of each month, beginning in September.

Two Adams county veterans have had their pensions increased: Henry J. Beard, Fairfield, who served in Co. G, 209th Pennsylvania Infantry, and John Prosser, of York Springs, who served in Co. K, 99th Pennsylvania Infantry. Each receives an increse from $50 to $72 per month.

Eli H. Troup, of Bermudian, and Cornelius Shue, of Abbottstown, Civil War veterans, have been granted $72 per month pensions.

Ford Breaks His Arm.

When the Ford touring car of Rev. S. L. Rice, Steinwehr avenue, became balky on Sunday morning and refused to start, "Tom" Plank, who lives just across the road from Mr. Rice was called in to help. As he was trying to crank the engine it backfired and the crank struck Mr. Plank on the right arm between the wrist and elbow with such force that both bones were broken. Mr. Plank is one of the proprietors of the electrical supply store on Chambersburg street.

Those accidents caused disabilities and property damages amounting to more than $1,000,000,000. With 10,000,000 automobiles in every imaginable state of mechanical fitness on the streets and roads of America to-day, directed by 10,000,000 drivers of every conceivable shade of expertness and carefulness, the question of safety in motoring has developed into a problem which is the subject of much study and discussion all over the United States.

Don't worry and complain about a bad back. Get rid of it! For weak kidneys, lame and achy backs, your neighbors recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Ask your neighbor. Read this statement:

Mrs. Chas. Kappes, 229 N. Stratton St., Gettysburg, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have always given me the very best of results. Three years ago I was feeling quite badly with kidney trouble. There was a dull heavy pain in the small of my back that gave me no end of trouble. These pains lay in my back and never let up during the day. In the morning when I got up I felt stiff and sore and this made it hard for me to get around. Dizziness came on very often and tiny spots blurred my vision. My kidneys were weak and as I had known of Doan's Kidney Pills for a long time I decided to try them. I got some from the People's Drug Store and they rid me of the backaches and did away with the other signs of kidney trouble."

twelve pieces of which were massed at that place. The cavalrymen were armed with breech-loading rifled carbines, that served their purpose admirably.

During a lull in the fighting I walked toward Little Round Top. The fighting there had been fierce; a great number of dead and wounded men lay around promiscuously. I noticed a surgeon at work, coat off, sleeves rolled up, bloody and perspiring. An old box or chest covered with a grey woolen blanket formed the surgical table. I approached, introduced myself, and stated why I was temporarily absent from my command. He said he was Dr. Lane of Chambersburg. He was amputating limbs—feet, hands, and arms; in fact alleviating pain and agony in every way possible. I can in mental revue see the wounded soldiers lying in rows on the ground, waiting their turn to be elevated to the surgeon's operating table for examination and operation. I remember a handsome young cavalry officer holding up his mangled left hand, pleading for a speedy operation and relief I recall the case to this day with a feeling of pity. A dainty beautiful ring encircled his left finger, which was hanging by a thread of tendon. The officer remarked, when the chloroform was about to be administered "That is an engagement ring, given by a sweet little Massachusetts girl. Please see that it's not lost!" Great tears welled up in his eyes as he thought of the sorrow this wound would cause "the sweet New England girl."

Dead, dying, and badly wounded men were everywhere. The crash upon crash of rifle volley, mixed with a continuous roar of cannons on our right, about Culp's Hill, told of the carnage there. Then, near sunset, the sun shone fairly through a rift in the clouds. A mighty roar of cannon and rifle fire, fierce and deadly, again occurred on our front and left flank; General Sickles was wounded and carried from the field, his troops sorely pressed. The Confederate pressure was obstinate and persistent. Crash upon crash, horrid and awful, sounded along the Emmitsburg road and out of the Peach Orchard. The brave Union boys were driven back, fighting, dying, but taking a fearful toll. The wheatfield was swept, the Confederates still pressed forward exultingly. Meanwhile the Pennsylvania Reserves had gained Little Round Top and were pushing the Confederates down the slope; and on the western front lay masses of the dead and wounded. The refluent waves of battle met at the foot of Litttle Round Top in that small valley of death; the locality was fought over in those three July days seventeen times. Think of it, my readers! Seventeen times the earth there rocked and trembled with the roar of cannons and crash of rifles; with the screams, the curses, and the cheers of the fighters. Seventeen times the deadly bayonet, poised and impelled in desperation, was thrust into the bodies of opposing warriors, carrying pain and death in its wake. Seventeen times the Angel of Death swept the sable plumage of his wing over this field of carnage and reaped a harvest to the full.

The evening of July 2nd was approaching. The whole western front of the long line of battle was a flame of action; our carbine fire was persistent, deadly. Then came a grand feature of the battle—so momentous that it now recurs to memory as a delusive dream. I saw General Hancock ride past our lines rapidly; a mounted aid was near him, directing a column of foot soldiers who were running rapidly, with their rifles at their right shoulders. Their flag as it rose and fell in the air, bore the legend: "First Minnesota Infantry." The Colonel was running at the head of his soldiers, occasionally looking back and gesticulating, urging hih men to greater speed. The crucial moment in the battle was approaching; this small body of foot troops was being thrown into the gap in the main battle line. I saw the Colonel and Adjutant halt and address their line, and immediately commence firing into the faces of the Confederates. I heard the scream of the Colonel: "By Battalion, charge bayonett! Charge!" And those brave boys with a mighty impulse threw themselves:

"Into the jaws of death—
Into the mouth of Hell."

I can now recall that splendid battalion of Union boys as they delivered their last blast of fire into the faces of the shouting and exultant Confiederates, whose first line wilted under the impact, with half their number lying on the ground, dead or wounded. Then I saw the fierce, frightful work of the bayonet. The Confiederates' line reeled back broken; their second line stopped advancing but fought savagely. Then other Union troops arrived and the dreaded danger was past. The Union line was saved from destruction. But the sacrifice was frightful, staggering. There, lying in heaps were the dead, wounded, and dying, friend and foe alike: an apotheosis of manly courage, of civic virtue and patriotism. As night fell, almost all firing ceased.

At an early hour, before full daylight on July 3rd, I was again on the Baltimore pike at the foot of Cemetery Hill, in conversation with a picket-guard, who pointed out to me the dead body of a Confiederate officer lying partly in the roadway The picket stated that the officer had prayed audibly for quite awhile. Upon examining him I found a bayonet thrust through the right lung. As he lay there in the early light, his fine face exposed, the thought came to me: Here is someone's father, son, or lover; or perhaps somewhere back in the southland a dear old mother waits for news of her son. He was handsome, even in death.

Shortly after daylight I heard violent reports of cannons and rifles from away toward Culp's and Power's Hills; the roar of battle was sustained and persistent. I saw a brigade hastening from our left flank and I realized that a severe struggle with the Confederates was in progress. I saw a brigade whose battle flags were emblazoned with a white star go rapidly into position. One of the regiments of this brigade had a battle flag waving defiantly, and as its folds spread out on the air I saw that its color was green and that on it was emblazoned a golden harp. This regiment, without losing its marching step, wheeled calmly and perfectly into the line of battle. Their rifles were raised automatically to the level of their eyes. A moment of suspense; then a blinding sheet of flame burst from each rifle. Again and again a hurricane of death-dealing missiles swept their front. Then I saw the battle flags, and long lines of men charge with poised bayonets through the forest. I heard their fierse battle cries, and then I saw the Confederate infantry run out into the open and beyond, broken, defeated and demoralized.

As I ascended Cemetery Hill from the eastern aspect I saw on the crown of the heights, on the hillslope across the pike, on the northern and western scarp of the hill and down to and in the "Long Lane," great numbers of Rebel soldiers lying; many of them dead, some still living, many more in the agony of dissolution. They lay thickly all over the environment here mentioned. The peculiar marking of their gray uniform attracted my attention. I mentioned this to a sentinel at the foot of the ridge, who informed me that these were the Louisiana Tigers under command of General Hays, who attacked the Union forces stationed there with a force of 1700 strong and left 1400 on the field killed and wounded. The sentinel told me of various phases of the battle; among other things that his brother had been killed by the Tigers the previous evening. "But," said he, and his eye assumed a wicked look, "I passed my compliments to the man who killed my brother. I ran my bayonet through him three or four times before I finished him." Then, continuing: "It was hell here for a while; they gave us hell; Rickett's batteries gave them hell." Then, indicating a soldier by a nod of his head: "He's one of them. He was a Tiger. He kept groaning and choking. I gave him all the water in my canteen. I heard an unearthly scream and looked quickly. I saw him standing upright, his hands clutching vaguely at something in the air. He gave another horrid scream and fell to the earth dead."

Again the command to which I was attached supported the artillery. It was shortly after noon hour, on July 3rd. I lay idly, noting the characteristics of some artillerymen. Some were placing fixed ammunition in the chests, some burnishing the cannons, some smoking, some playing cards, some lying on the grass apparently asleep, some fixing parts of gear, some filling their canteens with water. Suddenly the boom of a Confiederate cannon near the Lutheran Seminary rang out upon the air, followed immediately by a storm of shot and shell that rained upon us from one hundred and fifty cannons. Men and animals were torn to pieces, blown to atoms. Parts of trunks and limbs of trees and pieces of rock went hurling through the air propelled by the velocity of the shells and solid shot sent at the Union lines by the Confiederate cannoniers. Like a flash our idle cannoniers sprang to their work and, heavens above! how those cannons roared and thundered, sending back an avenging storm of shot and screaming, bursting, death-dealing missiles which fell among the Confiederate lines. The Confiederate aim was faulty, or the pen of the author would not be in evidence, nor hardly a soul of that Union line on Cemetery Height would have lived through that frightful cataclysm.

Then came the charging columns of Pickett's infantry; fifteen thousand fresh selected men. No living being can fully describe that awful ordeal; its horror will remain while life lasts and reason remains to the beholder. The Confiederate general Wilcox came into our immediate front, with his command of infantry. We heard the commands of their officers. One Confiederate officer with a voice like a fog horn was urging his men forward. I distinctly remember hearing his command: "Men of Aalabama, close up! Forward!" We heard and felt the approach of the Confiederate infantry. The old Rebel yell predominated. Their rifle fire was faulty, wild and high. Our Colonel walked among the men, saying quietly: "Boys, the Rebels are coming. You must not fire until you hear the order, then fire low and careful. We will whip them. We will whip them!" The troopers remained quiet, their courage true. Finally the Confiederate infantry appeared out of the enveloping cloud of cannon smoke and fog; they were then not more than fifty yards from our line. Then came the command: "Fire at will": and every bullet from our carbines seemed to reach its mark. The front Confiederate line collapsed and melted away from that fierce blast of fire in their very faces. They fell back several rods, and then I heard the foghorn voice again urging the men "forward and close up": and again our cavalry carbines roared in one continuous crash and the Confiederates drew off, badly defeated, their dead and wounded covering the ground of their advance. One Confiederate soldier, I remember, kept repeating, "Oh, my poor wife and children!" until death closed the scene and his battle days were ended.

Early in the morning of July 4th, 1863, my cavalry command entered Gettysburg. The Confiederates were retreating. Burial parties were out in all directions gathering up and giving sepulture to friend and foe. I rode out the Emmitsburg road to the scene of the fierce fighting at the Peach Orchard. The dead lay so thick that I could not ride into that locality for fear that the iron-shod feet of my horse might injure the bodies of the dead. I rose in my stirrups, looking out across the Peach Orchard, the Wheat Field, the Valley of Death to Little Round Top. In all that expanse, dead bodies lying close together met the eye; the Blue and the Gray in about equal numbers so it seemed to me.

Fifteen hundred dead Union soldiers were gathered up and buried in nameless graves. One's heart is indeed callous who does not become impressed by the fearful toll exacted to preserve this glorious Union, the majesty of the law, the glorious heritage of sacred traditions. I saw the sacred bodies of these young patriots gathered into long windrows—hundreds in a row; saw coarse blankets placed over them; and then saw them placed side by side in a shallow trench and covered with a few shovelsfull of earth. These soldier dead, these brave Union boys were shot to death that the Union might live; no name or mark of any kind was found upon them that would identify them. Their living comrades who could have recognized some mark, some bit of clothing, some identifying feature, had marched off in pursuit of the Confederate army; leaving them stiffening stark dead, nameless, dreamless, their only identification the suit of blue on their quiet forms. Doubtless somewhere in eternity their names will be revealed. The pitying heart of God alone can comprehend their sacrifice. At the head of each grave is only a small marble tablet on which is inscribed the word "Unknown," and a number.

Fifteen hundred nameless dead heroes,
All children of destiny,
hose blood flung like spray
Whose blood flung like spray
From the deeps of sea sources;
Like foam that is lashed
From the face of the waters;
Sped forth from the cannons and rifles,
Sped forth from the flushing sabres
By the grim and silent Reaper,
The grey-visaged mysterious Reaper,
Their names unknown.
Flung nameless on life's desolate cliff
Children of destiny are they
Who lie, here in the sunlight,
Awaiting the judgment day.
These are the sons of victory.
They followed the Flag in the mad storm of battle,
They fought where the fierce flames of battle enwrapped them;
They died—it was destiny—
They lie in the sunshine and rain.

Their names? No matter—
They died for their country.
Their graves are a throne.
All that a king can own!
There they lie till the trumpet awakes them;
The thunder's tone their only requiem.
Unknown, alone,
Asleep in the sunshine and rain.

The fine lines of Swinburne apply fairly to these nameless heroes:

"They have quaffed
Glory and Death in one immortal draught;
Surely among the undying men of old
Are these great hearts!"

The great battle of Gettysburg was ended and passed into history. Darkness and night came down. The wounded were being cared for; the dead—ah, the dead husband, son, or lover rest forever in the far away land of shadows where

"Daily the tides of life go ebbing and flowing beside them;
Thousands of throbbing hearts, where theirs are at rest and forever
Thousands of toiling hands, where theirs have ceased from their labors:
Thousands of weary feet, where theirs have completed the journey."

The battle days of Gettysburg were finished: an epoch in the Nation's history, in its life, in its glory; a mighty landmark in the progress of patriotism and national advancement. Here Glory and Renown, Death and Horror, twin sisters of Destiny, were closely linked in this frightful cataclysm.

A half century of years and more have passed since I listened to the roar of cannons, the crash of rifles, the battle cries of warriors, the screams and groans and prayers of the wounded and the dying, and all the ghastly sights and sounds on this field of slaughter and death; yet the mental impression remains of all this and more. At such times and in such places worlds are powerless to convey to the reader a just, true, and perfect picture of the events here recorded; they must be witnessed in all their stupefying horror to be fully realized. Even the magic brush of a Stansfield would be impotent.
